

Belgravia Gallery: Nurturing Artistry for Over Three Decades

Sandringham - King Charles III

For more than three decades, Belgravia Gallery has been a steadfast pillar in the art world, a testament to the enduring passion and expertise of its founders, the mother-daughter duo, Anna and Laura. With a rich history spanning some 35 years, this family-run business has not only weathered the ebbs and flows of the art market but has thrived, becoming a trusted haven for artists and art collectors alike.

Anna and Laura's discerning eye for talent has unearthed and nurtured many national and international artists. Their dedication to fostering emerging artists is palpable in their ever-expanding roster which includes luminaries like Charlie Mackesy, known for his heartwarming illustrations, and the illustrious King Charles III, whose distinctive style in watercolours has captivated audiences worldwide, and Nelson Mandela, whose simple sketches of Robben Island tell the story of his life and his country.

The gallery's walls are adorned with the visionary works of Sir Peter Blake, a celebrated figure in the pop art movement, whose influence reverberates through generations. Maria Filopoulou's evocative canvases, rich with symbolism and emotion, find a fitting home at Belgravia, resonating with a diverse audience. Dion Salvador Lloyd's masterful brushwork and Jan Coultts' explorations of form and colour add layers of depth to the gallery's diverse collection.

What sets Belgravia Gallery apart is the personalised touch that Anna and Laura bring to their business. They transcend the traditional gallery experience by personally engaging with clients in their homes and offices, offering tailored art advisory services. This bespoke approach ensures that every piece finds its perfect place,
